Uppark House near South Harting in West Sussex is considered to be one of The National Trust's most important buildings. After suffering terrible fire damage, the Trust took the decision to restore the unique interiors to their original 18th century condition using the building practices, techniques and skills of the period wherever possible. It was in accordance with these strict criteria that G Jackson & Sons was chosen to carry out the restoration of the period ceilings after a thorough examination of their capabilities by the client and professional team.
